Chanticleer — Why this university's yearbook is called the Chanticleer is anybody's guess, considering no one at this school would have any clue what a chanticleer is without consulting some kind of reference book, but Nan Keohane, trying to divert attention from her hairstyle, suggested to yours truly that the significance of the word Chanticleer be the subject of this essay, and for some reason she said that it had something to do with Walt Disney, so I initially assumed that Chanticleer had something to do with cryogenics, but I kind of wondered why the University of Coastal Carolina Chanticleers would name their athletic teams after a cartoonist who is colder than the average Kappa (no harm intended to above average Kappas), and setting out to research the etymology of the word Chanticleer (as well as that of the word Nannerl, which, as it turns out, is ancient Norse for ancient Greek for ancient Norse for Nannerl) I left the warmth of her wood-paneled office that reminded me of my grandparent's old station wagon (because of the wood-paneling, not because my grandparents knew Nan Keohane), which curiously enough had the wood paneling on the windshield, not the body, which explains why grandma crashed into that French pastry chef (the pastries, not the chef, were French, and while the chef was cold and flat, the pastries were still warm and flaky — just like grandma actually) and why, by the transitive property of automotivity, Nan had such a proclivity for the backseat of her car — I called her "Alf" which she assumed meant something out of this world, but was actually short for Alfred, and, as I am assuming that there must be at least one Alfred in the Duke University class of 1993, this conveniently brings me to my thesis, (so pay attention, Alf) — (not you, Nan, I'm talking to Alfred) —TANGENTS, and not the kind we learned about in geometry class (not the same geometry class, as that would require a very large classroom), ARE BAD, as are periods (notice that I have no periods, a point of fact that disqualifies me from being a woman, but the fact that women aren't funny should have alerted you to this fact already) and political correctness, a subject that every Duke student encounters innumerable times during his (you won't catch me writing "his or her" or "his/her" or any similar bunk — the last I checked men still made up 54 percent of the student body — if you don't like it then go to Wellesley — (nothing personal, Alf)) college career; the problem with P.C. is that it focuses its censure on words and not actions and institutions — what really is the problem here?: it can't be the work of frat intelligence for many reasons apart from the simple oxymoron of the term itself; it's not sororities because making those cool name tags is too time consuming to allow for plotting and scheming, much less thinking; I'd say it was a selective house, but I'm in one and nobody let me in on any plan, so that's ruled out; that leaves only the-whiny-don't-judge-me-as-long-as-I-can-judge-you-non-cliquish-every-man-um-person-for-him/herself-West-sucks-men-suck-frats-suck-the-administration-sucks-you-suck-I-suck-but-only-if-I-choose-to-do-so-independents: that's the logical conclusion, but if I had to tender a guess, I'd say it's the man who wields the real power here, who affects your lives every day and could kill all of us just like so many Branch Davidians if he wanted to — that's right: Duke Rathskellar Cafe and Sports Bar proprietor James "Zeke" Zechini — that's who is responsible for the deteriorating values in America: the lack of moral fiber (as well as lack of dietary fiber in our Duke cuisine) that plagues our great institutions, both academic and psychiatric, is clearly evident in Duke student's tendency to read magazines in the Lobby Shop without paying for them, to eat cookies on line in the C.I., to consume alcoholic beverages on Thursday nights, to vote Republican, and to sit on the T.V. side of Cameron; but notice that Duke made the Final Four six out of seven years before the Rat became a yuppified Burger King, then the cardboard cutouts go up, Zeke steals the celebrity from Coach K, and bam, Cal beats us and what we are left with is anarchy, chicken Italienne, and stacks of T-shirts attempting to convince us what a great year it was for Duke basketball (Hurley's accomplishment's: 2 NCAA championships, 3 Final Fours, 1 DWI, 34 bad haircuts; Coach K's accomplishments: 2 NCAA titles, 1 gold medal, 6 Final Fours, $1,000,000 from Nike, 1 consistently bad haircut, and of course the team shirts—Duke 105, Southern Illinois 70, on to the Thrilling 32! (and on the back, "Duke spays the Salukis", complete with a graphic depiction of a dog on the tip of a pitchfork — Ouch!) — and March 18, 1993, Duke 105, Southern Illinois 70, "I was in the Bahamas!"); but as well-educated individuals we cannot accept everything we read, hear, see, smell, touch, or drink; things often are not what they seem — for instance the chicken Italienne of which I spoke earlier is actually pigeon, and it's not even Italian, it's Pakistani, but Pigeon Pakistani, while alliterative, doesn't sound particularly appetizing — we must delve deeper, unlock the world's great mysteries, to "tunnel" our way beneath the great Gothic edifices of our lives (you can start by attempting to decipher this essay); as my grandmother once said, "Look out!" — as you too drive your wood-paneled station wagon through the pastry chefs that impede your path to success in life, don't forget that the word chanticleer actually means chicken Italienne in Pakistani—Got it?

1992 The Year

Respect for human life, respect for human dignity, for the common thread that unites all of humankind, seems far too scarce in the world as you begin your college days today.

President Keith Brodie, to the Class of 1996 at the 155th Opening Convocation

With all this emphasis on research, I think we should sell the University to IBM and allow Jerry Lewis to run a telethon for it.

Rick Roderick questioning the University's commitment to teaching.

The teacher was very alert and awake, a lot more so than most of the students.

Freshman Will Henson, on his 8 a.m. University Writing Course.

Nowadays you can't do anything without offending some small segment of the population.

Plymouth Nelson, president of Phi Delta Theta, on the flyer the fraternity posted advertising a party

You will find poems in the faces of your friends. Look in those faces.

Maya Angelou speaking to the Class of 1996

Her eyes were so expressive, so open. You could see her fear and excitement for us.

Trinity freshman Susan George on Angelou

If any group understands what constitutes contempt, it is this fraternity.

The written opinion of the Undergraduate Judicial Board on the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity

There has been a sort of lament of the loss of heritage that [illegible] here... But perhaps BOG's time has come [illegible]

[illegible] president of BOG, on their recent [illegible]

Hey, we're the ones losing the election. Either he's going to help us, or we end up where we are, losing. It simply cannot hurt us.

A Senior Bush aide, on Perot's entering the campaign

I was raised to believe, when I was the age of the students in this audience, that this is a 'can do' country, not a 'can't do' country. And it's time we say 'We can' again. We can.

Bill Clinton at a rally in Raleigh

It could happen again.

The report of the Warren Commision, which completed a five month study of the Los Angeles riots

I was really scared. I was just shaking. I couldn't help it.

Nell Gilbert, one of the four women held hostage in the hospital by a gunman

Our first priority now must be to provide support and counseling to the courageous members of the Medical Center staff and those others who were directly confronted by Mr. Coffin.
Our hearts go out to the family and friends of Ricky Coffin, a young man who somehow became lost in our society.

President Keith Brodie, in a statement following the hospital hostage crisis

It doesn't feel like they did anything except paint lines on the street.

Trinity junior Kurt Lutgert, on the bike path

The people have spoken, and we respect the majesty of the democratic system.

George Bush, on his defeat to Bill Clinton

Don't get your head up your butt. I wouldn't say it if it wasn't important.

Men's Basketball Head Coach Mike Krzyzewski on the importance of fan support.

[We are] trying to strike a balance between being availab and non-intrusive.

Sue Wasiolek, Dean of Student Life, following the bus accident that took the life of freshman Amy Geissinger in Review 1993

Some tough choices will need to be made, since none of us can escape the challenges of today's critical times, but Duke's prevailing mood is not one of retrenchment and despair, but of prudent, steady, creative progress.

Nannerl Keohane, the eighth president of the University

I can think of no better first woman president for Duke…we are happy for you, but sad for us.

Nancy Kolodny, Dean of the college at Wellesley

It tears me up that we lost only because I don't have the opportunity to coach these guys anymore. Every time we went out on the court I knew they would give me their bodies, their minds and their hearts. Losing a game doesn't mean a damn thing.

Mike Krzyzewski on Duke's loss to California in the 1993 NCAA Tournament

I think it's important to have something in your life which is meaningful to you, something that you really like to do, that will help you stay away from drugs and alcohol.

Bobby Hurley, Co-Captian of the Men's Basketball team, on the dangers of driving drunk

I think he's learned a lesson from it.

Esther Vice, a ninth grader at Jordan High School, on Hurley's May 5 arrest.

Clinton is not the most eloquent of speakers. For me, missing a speech by Bill Clinton is like missing a Seattle Seahawks game…I don't think he's JFK, contrary to popular opinion.

Rick Roderick, Assistant Professor of Philosophy, on President Clinton's Inaugural Address

It's the best thing to happen to the disease since Rock Hudson… the only thing better would be if George Bush's son got AIDS.

Charles Van Der Horst, director of the AIDS clinical trial unit at UNC-Chapel Hill, on Magic Johnson's announcement that he is HIV positive

How many times do we have to have a speak-out? Why can't you get off your benches and walk 10 feet to hear what we have to say? Why can't you put down your ball and bat and walk 30 feet to hear what we have to say?

Trinity freshman Shavar Jeffries to fraternity members surrounding a BSA-ASA rally

I think we need to combat the middle school behavior that seems to be an outgrowth of male fraternity houses.

Janet Dickerson, Vice President of Student Affairs, on fraternity housing

The University's social problems won't go away just because fraternities do.

Trinity junior Chetan Ghai, on fraternity housing

In the view of the faculty, ROTC should be able to cease discrimination within five years or else cease its relationship with the University.

Religion professor Dale Martin, chair of a University committee on non-discrimination

I just hope that they properly train people so you guys won't get pandemonium.

Susan Coutu, U.S. Postal Services employee at Duke Station, on the new University management of the post offices

Due to the fact that [David] Augustine was not in the country, I think his campaign manager would have had a hard time persuading members of the Duke community to vote for him.

Trinity sophomore Brett Busby, on the absence of David Augustine, a candidate for student body President

For the first time it seems like we're making some serious headway. I'm bent on getting this done, deadly serious.

Hardy Vieux, ASDU President, on the new restructuring proposal.

I was just trying to stay alive, sir. They never gave me a chance to stay still.

Rodney King, testifying about his March 3, 1991 beating.

The Black Faculty Initiativ

Until thirty years ago, black students were denied admission to this University. Today, they make up about seven percent of the University population. Black students bring diversity and the African American experience to this campus, but Duke's commitment to offering all aspects of educational experiences has so far failed. One of the main reasons for this failure is that blacks are still greatly underrepresented among Duke faculty.

In 1985 efforts were begun by many students to pressure the University into hiring more black faculty. It wasn't until April 21, 1988, that the University passed an official document that mandated the hiring of more black faculty in each department. The document's goal was to have one new faculty member in each university "hiring unit," by the fall of 1993. This would amount to fifty-six black faculty on campus. To date, nineteen new black faculty have been hired, but fourteen of the black professors that were here in 1988 have left, leaving us with only a gain of five. This is a serious problem that must be addressed.

The Duke community as a whole fails to be diverse and well rounded when there is an obvious void of black and other minority professors, who bring a unique view to each subject. Duke has repeatedly promised its students a more diverse learning environment through its "Black Faculty Initiatives," and "Duke's Vision." Yet the learning environment has not changed dramatically enough to fit the changing world outside Duke's walls. Demographic changes mandate that we not only learn about other cultures, but also learn to interact with different cultures and ethnic groups to ensure success after graduation. Duke University is cheating its students by not providing the most diverse learning environment possible. Students are being denied the exposure necessary to excel in a world that has a population make-up much different from Duke's. It is necessary to examine Duke's commitment to diversity and find out wh its students continue to be cheated out of the diversity the were promised.

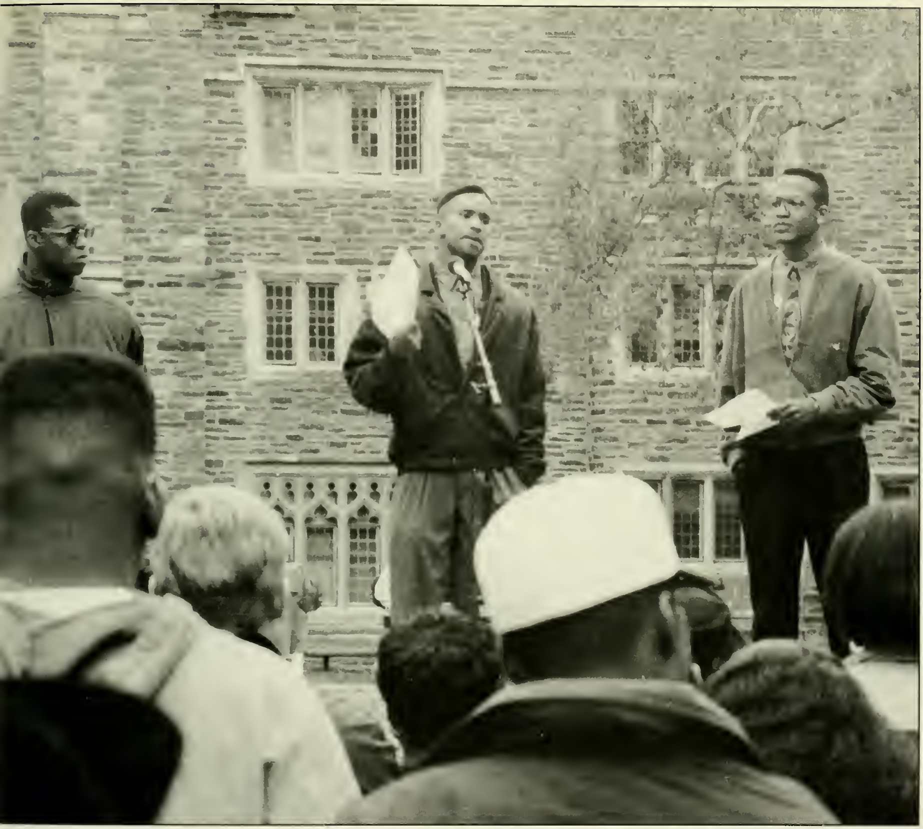
As stated in the Academic Council's resolution, e department must provide documentation on its efforts to recruit black professors. Students must examine those documents and meet with the administration to clear up t many ambiguous statements within the actual resolution.

Without a clear understanding of what must be do and what steps will be taken if the resolution stipulations not met, the University will continue making excuses to avoid fulfilling its commitment. More promises on paper not acceptable. Rather, resources and mechanisms must b put in place. The goal is to see the University hold to its commitment and set up each and every structure set forth the initiative to aide in the process of hiring black faculty Accountability must also be made clear. An effective sys of checks and balances must be established so that responsible parties can no longer shirk their responsibilities.

It is important to note that the overall purpose of initiative is not to flood the campus with new black faces The intent of the resolution is to increase the overall qua of education here at Duke University by hiring more Qua Minority professors.

Too often in the past, this problem has been addressed but never resolved because the proposed steps we not followed through. This issue must be resolved once a for all. The support of the entire Duke population is imp tive. As a community, we must see to it that the Univer sets up the structure to ensure the successful completion the initiative. Duke University has made a commitment hire more Black Faculty. This must become a reality.

-BSA, 1992-1993



Fear and Loathing

Tim Lomperis is a white professor of political science at Duke University, the school from which he earned his Ph.D. A Vietnam veteran with a background in intelligence, he has published four books focusing on international relations and insurgencies. He is one of the highest rated undergraduate teachers at the University and the top-rated in his department.

Darryl Roberts is an African-American professor in the same department. He also studies international conflict, focusing on the technology of war. He has received moderate marks for his teaching and has published no books to date.

These two very different men need only look across the hall out their office doors to see each other. This year, they have had much to talk about, for despite their differences, they have much in common. Both Lomperis and Roberts were denied tenure this year. Both claim that personal biases played into their cases. Both have filed grievances with the University and are contemplating lawsuits.

"I thought this was an environment

There are stark differences in their cases, but in both decisions one thing is clear: Politics, backstabbing, and the keeping of secrets currently pervade the Political Science Department of Duke University.

Lomperis: Victim of a "Stalinist Purge?"

When Dr. Timothy Lomperis first entered his office in Perkins Library, he heaved a heavy sigh of relief. He had recently left Louisiana State University, where he says the atmosphere in the Political Science Department was "so acrimonious that faculty would regularly scream and throw things at each other in the hall." Now, returning to Duke he felt, "like he had finally found a place where a scholar could work without rancor."

Sitting in the same office almost eight years later, Lomperis weaves a tale literally oozing with rancor and deceit. "I've found that the problems [between faculty] are really much worse at Duke," he said. "At least people were open about it at LSU."

Certain members of the Duke Political Science community are overt about their dislike of Lomperis. According to a letter in Duke Magazine by Dr. Ole Holsti, departmental Director of Undergraduate Studies, two "worl class bullies" made a concerted effort to prevent Lomperis from gaining tenure. Shortly after Lomperis became a tenu track scholar, one professor allegedly told him "You don't belong here. You should leave." After writing an opinion-changing dissent on a faculty search committee, the chair o that committee allegedly told him, "I don't believe in this democracy bullshit. You know that assistant professors wh make waves don't become associate professors."

Dr. Peter Lange, a professor in the department said, find the language Ole used objectionable. I don't think anyone did anything to characterize them as a bully...This was fundamentally an academic disagreement. Reasonable people can disagree with one another."

Although Holsti has not named the "bullies" public he has been a chief defender of the embattled assistant professor. "No one deserves tenure more than Tom," Holst said. "Show me another major university where an excelle professor with four well-received books would be denied tenure—there just isn't one."

Lomperis concedes that he does not necessarily foll the vogue in his field. He has two chief differences with many political scientists.

"I'm a Vietnam veteran," he said. "I worked in the intelligence community. I make no apologies for it. Radic souls find that horrifying. Some members of this departme rode to glory on an anti-war chariot and I took their sacre cows away from them. They couldn't go on making wild accusations about the war because they knew I'd be lookin over their shoulder."

The second difference lies in the area of political theory. Many contemporary scholars advocate an analytic approach to political science. "It's not as if I'm ignorant o these rational actor theories as some people would have y believe," Lomperis said. "I am very aware of them and rej them. I thought this was an environment where many vie could be accepted."

Student concern over this case prompted a flurry letters to the Chronicle and legislation from ASDU supp

in Political Science

ere many views could be accepted."

g Lomperis' struggle for tenure. That legislation was passed to the Board of Trustees by Damon Wilson, who is a udent representative on the Academic Affairs Committee the Board. In an unprecedented move, the Board broke om the order of business to discuss the issue.

"The attitude was that they should defer to the aca-emics on decisions like this," said Wilson. "Thomas ngord [the University Provost] made an impassioned eech about how the Trustees were overstepping their unds if they overturned the decision and none of them ew enough about it to argue with him."

Lomperis' problems have gone outside the confines of e University. He alleges that a member of the department lled the University of Kentucky and made claims that used him not to get a job there.

"I wish I knew why they [opponents within the de-rtment] dislike me so intensely," he said. "I have to protect yself now...I don't know if they've stopped, because I can't e a job anywhere. It's a Stalinist purge to get me out of the siness altogether."

oberts: "The Civil War has not had a sufficient impact"

Darryl Roberts is only the second tenure-track Afri-n-American in the history of the Duke Political Science epartment, a department that currently has no black gradu-e students. Although he was hired in a "race search" to d minority candidates, he now cites institutional racism as principal reason for his tenure denial.

The other reason he cites is an alleged personal bias the part of former department chair Allan Kornberg. ornberg acted unethically, says Roberts, by serving as chair his tenure committee after the two had engaged in a ancial deal that went sour. A faculty hearing committee led that such action was a "professional mistake."

Roberts' case is made more difficult by the fact that e decision to deny him tenure was unanimous. Although a umber of members of the department indicated moral pport, none would go so far as to say that he deserved nure.

Roberts' TCEB ratings in 1991 averaged 3.5 on a 1-5 scale, one of the lowest ratings in the department. "I am a good teacher," Roberts said. "I am not a great teacher. I never claimed to be."

Although other tenured professors have similar ratings, what many see as Roberts' greatest liability is the fact that although he has written numerous journal articles, he has not published a book. He does have a manuscript that had been on contract with Duke Press for three years. The book was dropped shortly before his tenure vote. Although Duke Press Director Lawrence Malley "can unequivocally deny" that there was any impropriety in the process, Roberts claims that the book was dropped under pressure from members of the department.

Roberts now intends to put his case in the hands of the Board of Trustees. When asked what he will do if it fails there, Roberts quietly said, "I'll sue."

Although the Roberts case has not engendered the kind of adamant outcry that Lomperis' has, there has been some support from student groups. Tim'm West, outgoing BSA President, said that some letter writing had been going on within his organization. "I think it's sad that things like this happen to discourage young blacks from pursuing careers in academia."

"The problem," said Roberts, "is that this department and this University are full of old men from another generation who have never matured. Out of 1,600 professors, only 35 are black. The Civil War has not had a sufficient impact at Duke."

Tallying the Score

Whatever the outcome of these two cases, "rancor" between members of the department abounds. The department is rife with infighting and bad blood. The question is not only whether or not the University will lose these two scholars, but also this: What kind of scholarship can take place in such an environment?

Jean O'Barr, MWF, 50, 63", not slim, gray/blue, Ph.D., Director of Women's Studies Program. 23 years feminist advocacy, still advocating. Loves students, learning, organizing, politics, family, friends, flowers. Hates arrogance, many customs, some rules. Values commitment and community. Seeks to grow more radical with age, in company of lifetime partner WMO.

William O'Barr, MWM, 50, honest six-footer, mane long gone. Ph.D. Professor of Cultural Anthropology. Recent exotic destinations: Madison Ave. and Wall St. Avid runner/biker/gardener. Seeks continuities in relationships (including marriage) along with new experiences. Some favorites: great food, outdoor adventures, engaging students.

"The first impulse of a transplanted population which is not sure of maintaining the old order of values in the transplanted locale is that of reversion. Reversion is the obsession with a single origin: one must not alter the state of being.(...) to diversion.(...) Diversion is not a useful ploy unless it is nourished by reversion: not a return to the longing for origins, to some immutable state of Being, but a return to the point of entanglement, from which we were forcefully turned away; that is where we must ultimately put to work the forces of creolization, or perish."

Fine Arts Photographer

"In 1972 when I started working with students wishing to use photography as a means of expression, the Art Museum held an annual exhibit of student work in their north gallery. Photographs had to be exhibited in a separate (but equal?) gallery at the top of the stairwell, as photography was considered a lesser medium. The photographers secretly enjoyed the space, as all visitors to the second floor had to pass our exhibit. Twenty-one years later, the medium of Photography has been accepted and embraced. On the other hand, student art work, in general, is currently relegated to lesser and lesser gallery space. Win some-lose some."

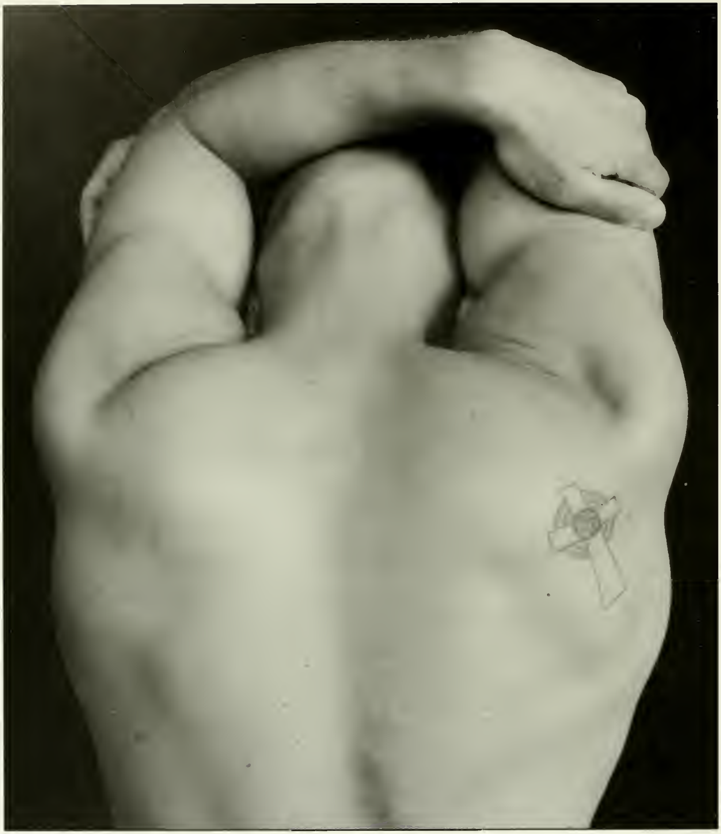
Marines

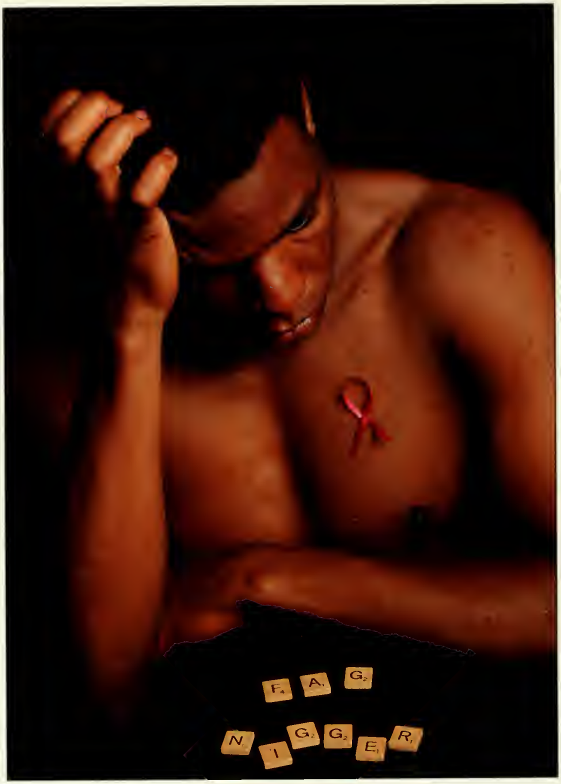
The Marines I knew were about as ruthlessly bullheaded and foulmouthed a collection of juvenile delinquents and intellectual malcontents as could be assembled without cages, whips, and chains."

- James P. Steiba, Wall Street Journal: December 16, 1986

"It is not the critic who counts, not the man who points out how the strong man stumbled or where the doer of deeds could have done better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena; whose face is marred by dust and sweat and blood; who strives valiantly; who errs and comes short again and again; who knows the great enthusiasms, the great devotions, and spends himself in a worthy cause; who at the best, knows in the end the triumph of high achievement; and who, at the worst, if he fails at least fails while daring greatly so that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who know neither victory nor defeat."

-Teddy Roosevelt





Tim'm West

BSA President, 1992-1993

"The human spirit is not one which finds contentment in containment but is one which will seek or create those spaces where all of its characteristics (namely the oppressor in each of us and the longing for love that we all need for survival) can be constructively critiqued and positively valued. In these spaces the liberated self is best able to transform hate into love, make friends out of enemies."

Hardy Vieux

Student Body President, 1992-1993

"Men may grow weary and faint, they may stumble and fall; but those who look to the Lord will renew their strength, they will mount up on wings as eagles, they will run and not be weary, they will walk and never grow faint."

Founder, Swing Magazine

"I began Swing Magazine as my way to contribute to and improve our college environment. I dedicated three years of my life to unifying and electrifying our campus with something that was new and different. I was pleased to receive the accolades and following that I did, but I was taken by the pessimism and negativity which I found amongst some of my fellow students. History has shown us that every novel idea has a critic and as students it might behoove us to remember this as we grow and are met by life's challenges. If David Lauren has a legacy, I hope that it is that we must believe in who we are and what we are doing. Only then can we inspire great ideas, progressiveness, and the integrity to nurture our individuality."

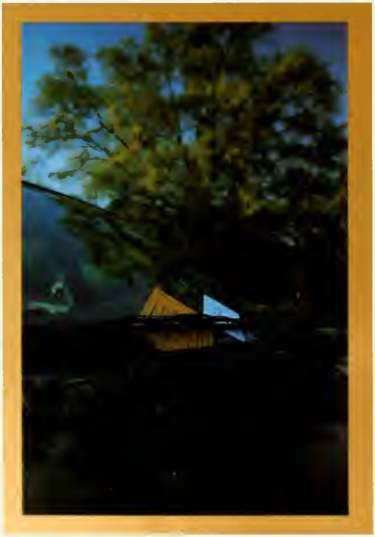
Have you seen them?



School of Smoothedges

I must resist the sandpaper that wears my mind
into convention,
conforms to grain.
Tasting the grit
and swallowing one thousand bits
I am shamed.

The carpenters grind away:
carving fingers,
moulding head,
casting eyes.
How easy to yield
the jagged borders
to smoothing down,
wooden beasthood.

The sandpaper smooths ragged edges forming a prettier weaker frame.
If I do not rebuff the shaving down
shaping of me
I will disappear.

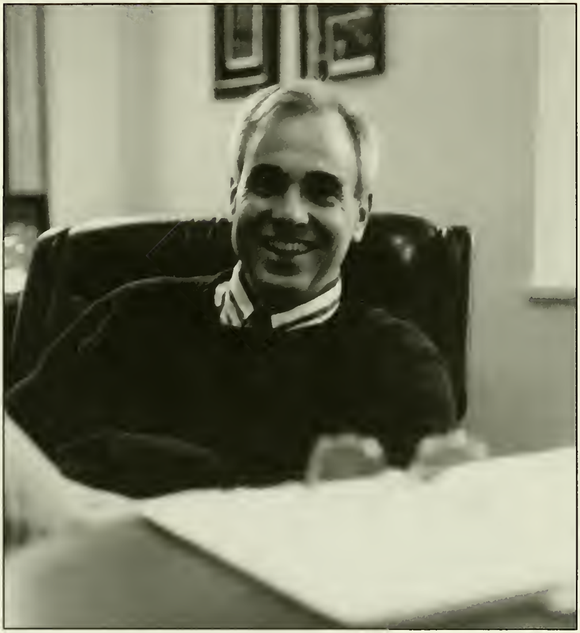
HOMECOMING '92

Dedication

Because of his everlasting commitment to every aspect of this University, his generosity, his inspirational strength of character, his encouragement and support, his curiosity about Duke's inhabitants, and his constant endeavors to improve our lives, we dedicate the 1992-1993 Chanticleer to President Brodie.



H. Keith H. Brodie

Seventh President of Duke University, 1985-1993

"Let your imagination be stirred by the unusual or the unknown; allow yourself to be attracted to the provocative, the challenging, the unconventional. In the long run you will find that the greatest benefit to be derived from your Duke education is the willingness to be curious about everything you encounter. It is a habit of mind that will serve you well in all walks of life, and it is this very thing that academic freedom seeks to protect -- to insure that human curiosity will never be punished."

The Chanticleer

The 1993 Chanticleer was printed by Hunter Publishing, a subsidiary of Jostens' Inc., of Winston-Salem, North Carolina. Senior portraits were taken by Varden Studios, Rochester, New York. The cover of the 1993 Chanticleer is a black, unvarnished Roxite cover with gold silk-screen.

The Chanticleer uses three types of paper, 90 lb. Eloquence, 80 lb. MOE and 14 lb. UV Ultra II (transparent pages). The endsheets are black-tinte 80 lb. paper.

All color photos except those pages 2,3,189, and 192 are 4-color produced from color transparencies. Photos on 2,3, and 189 were hand-painted black and white photos. Photo on 192 was a hand sepia-toned black and white photo. All black and white photos are laser-scanned halftones using a 150 line screen.

Flats 1,2,34,35 and 36 as well as the transparent pages used Pantone 8580C Metallic Spot Color.

Cover and front endsheets were die-cut.
